Spending a Day in China and Nepal

Although more and more children today are exposed — via the Internet and television — to how people live in various parts of the world, it is important that from a very young age children learn that not everyone lives the way they do.

In I See the Sun in China (©10/10, www.satyahouse.com, $12.95 pb), readers follow a young girl as she travels from a small town in China to the city of Shanghai to spend time with her aunt. After waking and watching her grandfather do his Tai Chi^o, she eats her congee^o before leaving for the ferry. Her day in Shanghai with Auntie includes lunch, shopping, tea in the park, supper in a restaurant, and contemplation about her day as she goes to sleep. The text is shown in both English and Mandarin Chinese.

In I See the Sun in Nepal (©11/10, www.satyahouse.com, $12.95 pb), readers follow a young girl as she spends the day in her village. After waking, her Ama^o makes her breakfast of chiura^o and tea. Following her chores, she goes to school and has a some time with her friends before going home to do chores before supper and finally to bed. The text is shown in both English and Nepalese.

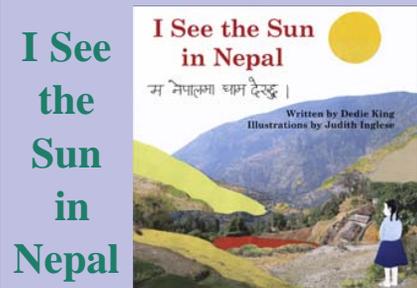

Both books are beautifully illustrated by Judith Inglese with warm, engaging collages made from photographs, paper cut-outs, and drawings.

These are the first two titles in the I See the Sun Series. Each book in the series follows events that take place from dawn until night over the course of one day in a different country. The story in each book is simple, yet accurately reflects the culture as seen through a child's eyes. Children will be able to recognize the similarities as well as the differences between their own daily life and the culture of another place. Seeing the story written in another language also opens children's eyes to the many forms words have.

The I See the Sun Series is one more way to help children become familiar with other ways of life around the world.

“After school I see my friends. We play games in the bazaar.” ©10/10 from I See the Sun in Nepal by Dedie King with illustrations by Judith Inglese.

“With a loving heart for China, the writer tells the story about a girl whose natural and simple curiosity about her own future reflects the expectation for change in China overall.”

~ Zhang Jia Zhu, former Dean of Education, Zhoushan, China

“This series will be sought after by parents, primary teachers and librarians, eager to give children a gentle but realistic world view.” ~ Elaine Donoghue, Librarian

The next title in the series will be I See the Sun in Afghanistan (early 2011), followed by I See the Sun in India and I See the Sun in Russia.

Meet the Author and Illustrator

Dedie King has traveled all over the world. She especially loves the Far East. In the mid-sixties, King was a Peace Corps volunteer in Nepal. She taught school in Katmandu and in Bandipur. Together with her husband Peter, she periodically returns to visit friends in Bandipur. Dedie is the founder and Clinical Director of Listening, the Barre (MA) Integrated Health Center and also practices Classical Five Element Acupuncture.

Illustrator Judith Inglese designs and fabricates ceramic murals for public spaces such as hospitals, libraries, schools and outdoor urban environments. Her murals, which have been interior and exterior installations, ranging in size from several feet in length to as large as two hundred and thirty feet, are composed of individually crafted free-form tiles. To see some of her work, go to www.judithinglese.com.

In her spare time, Inglese makes books as gifts for her children and grandchildren. In the I See the Sun books, she combines photography and drawing in her illustrations.
